

Carlson Wagonlit Travel Names New Global Chief Financial Officer

PARIS, June 17, 2008 – Carlson Wagonlit Travel (CWT), the leading travel management company, has named Marc Karako to the position of executive vice president and chief financial officer, effective July 1, 2008. Based in Paris, he will report to Douglas Anderson, CWT president and chief executive officer, and be a member of the global executive team.

Mr. Karako, age 52, has broad experience in finance, strategy and investor relations. In his most recent position, he headed up the Finance practice at Resources Global Professionals, a management consulting firm and a former division of Deloitte. From 2003 until 2007, he was chief financial officer of Vallourec, world leader in the production of seamless steel tubes. Prior to that, he served as vice president of Finance at Thomson, a European technology company, between 1999 and 2003. Before joining Thomson, he spent four years with Cabot, a U.S. chemical company, where he was chief financial officer for Europe. Mr. Karako also held various management positions in finance at IBM Europe from 1985 to 1995. He started his career as a treasury analyst at Exxon France.

Commenting on his appointment, Mr. Anderson said, "Marc will be a great asset to Carlson Wagonlit Travel. He's had a variety of experiences in several business sectors, and he will play a significant role as we continue to maximise our effectiveness in a constantly changing business environment and successfully implement our three-year strategic development plan CWT 2010."

A French citizen, Mr. Karako holds a Master of Science degree from the French engineering school École Nationale des Ponts et Chaussées and a Master of Business Administration degree from the University of Chicago.
